Delay is caused by difficulty in reading and writing, due to Ashworth's 14 years neglect of my cataracts and subsequent obstruction of a real hospital giving me an eyetest and glasses. Ashworth's preferred policy is to handicap prisoners in order to feel/appear superior to them.

Braintree? Exemplifies the principle we've been expressing lifelong. The power of the individual and that an army is not necessary in order to modify or influence political/social/bureaucratic indifference. But 99.9% of the population are only capable/content to endlessly whine. And naturally any individual who is capable of acting is politically <sup>2</sup> marginalised / discredited by state psychiatric parrots — an erstwhile Russian tradition. But ironically America has become the neurotic / psychotic leader of psychiatric babble in the west, with an army of quacks daily inventing "mental disorders" to cover every normal aspect of human behaviour. Naturally the politicians are grateful for every additional method of control quasi-scientists to can ingratiate, for the state to abuse and lock up anyone who is a danger to its totalitarian aspirations. The utmost docility / servility of today's generation, as compared with the students of the 1960s — where leaders were household names — is illustrated by the way ~~obviously~~ obscurely

rich bankers and their political lackeys have blatantly plundered public funds, to clear their greed-motivated gambling losses that have bankrupted western economies — yet not one assassination has occurred!

Judges are fond of "making an example" of petty criminals in society, yet extreme horror is expressed at the suggestion that the same principle be applied to white collar criminals who commit crimes on a global scale. Russia certainly knows how to deal with billions of criminals who believe themselves above and beyond the law. The selective absolutism of Robespierre is required for western plutocrats. But as there are no "Incorruptibles" on the horizon, only the individual can fill the moral vacuum. The modern infantile popularity of comic-book superheroes 4 is perhaps a manifestation of the mass subconscious wish for ~~the~~ required retribution against the upper class criminals who run/control society with impunity, under laws they themselves make and break at will.

Harry Potter? No, I can't understand the popularity of such a banal creation.
Even the films are unwatchable. Another banal UK hero is James Bond = basically a servile rightwing government and establishment snobbish civil servant!
The UK actually treats Bond half seriously, whereas the French regard Bond films as comedies. The first few films starring Sean Connery, in the 1960s, stayed within the bounds of reality at least.
But later ones became increasingly ludicrous, as did the actors playing the role - particularly Roger Moore. <sup>1</sup> So both Harry Potter and Bond cut no ice with me, not even as entertainment.

The Olympics? Another media and politically generated event most people couldn't care less about, but pay lip service to in order to be socially and politically correct. Many people likewise pretend to like football. Pathetic peer conditioning. Muslim retaliation (for Iraq and Afghanistan) of a substantial and fitting degree is long overdue, so perhaps anticipation that the UK Olympics may provide the occasion for such will increase interest.

Latest statement puts the UK on the same level as Italy in bankruptcy! But of course the UK always has vast invisible earnings from abroad, and concealed national reserves, and simply grabs any excuse to invent a crisis to increase taxes and keep the UK underclass at <sup>the</sup> constant subsistence level of willing serfs. The upper classes never sacrifice or suffer, not even during wars, from which they are the

~~the~~ beneficiaries, of course... Churchill lived like a king during WW2, with bottles of champagne and spirits at every meal, ensuring a permanent state of drunkenness for his speeches. The official menus he enjoyed, of the best of everything, have recently been made public - no "blood, sweat and tears" included! Even more disgusting was the ten years of war rationing in the UK up until 1954. Germany finished rationing long before the UK, of course. Curiously, it's only now that I resent that extra ten years of rationing in the incompetent UK - whose Labour government was penalised by America, aid-wise, for being "socialist".

Best wishes,

Ps: The EEE laws, allowing unchecked immigration from every subcontinent, and forbidding deportation of foreign criminals, <sup>are</sup> ~~is~~ ridiculous. Not even America allows citizenship/<sup>equal</sup> human/civil rights to immigrants.
